St. Louis Goes for 100% Clean Energy

BY HENRY ROBERTSON

Climate breakdown is a global problem but it's finding local solutions. The governments in Washington DC and Jefferson City don't care, so city governments are picking up the slack. In 2017 the St. Louis Board of Aldermen resolved to make the city run on 100% clean energy for electricity (wind, solar and efficiency) by 2035. St. Louis is not the only city in the region to pledge to go 100% renewable — University City, Maplewood, and Dellwood are others — but it is the biggest, and it's where the Sierra Club is concentrating its efforts. If you live in one of our innumerable suburbs and would like to get your town moving in that direction, we'll support you!

St. Louis plans to have city operations running on clean energy by 2025 and the whole city — all its neighborhoods and businesses — by 2035. That's a tall order, and it will take the cooperation of one of the coal-heaviest utilities in the nation, Ameren Missouri. The key is demand. We demand action and Ameren meets the demand. One big motivator is corporate demand. When companies like AB InBev, Wal-Mart, Amazon, Apple and Google start demanding renewable electricity, utilities can hardly say no. They respond with "green tariff" programs. They provide wind energy and let companies subscribe to it.

Ameren has a green tariff called

Renewable Choice. An offering of 400 megawatts (MW) of new wind, yet to be built, was fully subscribed in no time. Ameren allowed cities as well as companies to subscribe, so St. Louis put in its non-binding expression of interest. The wind farms and contracts will follow. A combination of energy efficiency programs, rooftop solar and green-tariff wind will get city government running on clean energy. Jobs and justice are key components of St. Louis' 100% clean energy drive. Wind farms are remote, but efficiency programs and solar panels get right down into our neighborhoods. The fastest growing job in Missouri is solar installer, and equipping buildings with energy-efficient lighting, appliances, and insulation promises even more jobs.

"Ameren will need no urging here; they're salivating at the thought of this big new market."

Putting solar panels on your house is great, but not everyone can do it. Your house may not have good solar exposure, or you may be a renter or a condo owner or can't afford the upfront cost. The answer is community solar, installations that serve multiple customers. Where the utility is a monopoly like Ameren, this must be provided by it.

Remembering Sierra Club leader Jerry Sugarman

BY CAROLINE PUFALT

This August our area lost a passionate, hard working environmental advocate when Jerry Sugarman passed away. Jerry was a long time Sierra Club member and fierce defender of rivers. Jerry is best known for his fearless and successful efforts to stop the Meramec Dam, which was already under construction when he and others upped their opposition efforts. A cumulative effort of many volunteers, a Sierra Club lawsuit, and an eventual public referendum in 1978 defeated the dam. Jerry was at the core of that effort. Jerry also contributed to the early development of Missouri Sierra Club. As an avid canoeist, hiker and nature lover he added much to the chapter's early outings and public lands program. Jerry flew to San Francisco in December 1971 to deliver the application for the development of a Missouri chapter. Our chapter was then established in 1972. Jerry is survived by his wife, Darlene Davies-Sugerman, who is also a friend to many Sierrans. As you float the Meramec, think of Jerry's dedication. He set an inspiring example for us all.

A New Start at County Government, A New Chance for Energy Efficiency

BY CAROLINE PUFALT

Even folks who pay little attention to local government would have found it hard to miss the big changes in St Louis County Government in this year. County Executive Steve Stenger, along with a few of his close associates, pled guilty to various versions of corruption. We now have a new County Executive, Sam Page and several new County Council members. Two of whom, Kelli Dunaway and Rita Heard-Days, we supported in an August special election. These, and other changes, bode well for more efficient and transparent county government. Improving energy efficiency standards in our residential building codes is one item we hope can move forward. Over three years ago, the Sierra Club, and other allies, campaigned for improved St Louis County building codes. The county was then in the process of updating its outdated 2009 codes. But the designated county building committee recommended a fractured set of codes, some of which were actually less efficient. Nationwide, buildings are responsible for 40% of our energy use. This is a huge part of our CO2 liability. Energy efficiency is essential to combating climate change. As mundane as building codes may sound, it is our responsibility to keep those standards high.

A well-attended February 2017 public hearing clearly illustrated public interest in up-to-date energy efficient homes. St Louis County homes should not be second or third rate. With this controversy and the other chaos, confusion and malfeasance afoot in county government at the time, the code change was never voted on by the full County Council.

Now with a new county government landscape, we are optimistic about developing good building code recommendations and a favorable County Council vote. But it still won't be easy. Our code is now 10 years behind. Some of the backward forces in the county are still at play.

Contact your Council Member & tell them you support the 2015 International Energy Conservation Code.

Tim Pekarek: 25 Years of Outings Leadership

BY CAROLINE PUFALT

One of our local volunteers, Tim Pekarek, was recently recognized for his 30 years as a Sierra Club member. That's impressive, but, more importantly, Tim has spent about 25 of those years as an outings leader in the Club's Inspiring Connections Outdoors (ICO) program. Most Sierrans grew up enjoying outdoor adventures. But for some Americans, childhood experiences in nature seem unattainable. ICO is a remedy to that. Originally called "Inner City Outings", the program challenges local volunteers to lead special outings which bring children who, for a variety of circumstances, would not otherwise visit a park, learn about nature or camp overnight. We have had ICO events in the St Louis area for 25 years. Over that time a variety of volunteers have helped, but Tim has been a mainstay. ICO programs across the country help introduce young people to the sights, sounds and the feel of nature. Many studies show that children benefit from being outdoors and developing a sense of the natural world.

Experience outdoors helps build well rounded citizens and maybe even future Sierra Club leaders. Thanks to Tim and all other ICO volunteers.

Erica Hoffman: MO Chapter Legislative Chair

BY CAITLIN ZERA

Get to know the Missouri Chapter's new Legislative Chair, Erica Hoffman! Originally from Texas, Erica attended Missouri Southern University and then moved to St. Louis in 1997. She currently lives in Fenton, MO with her husband and two children. After running for Missouri House of Representatives last year, and receiving the endorsement of The Sierra Club, she became interested in serving on the Legislative Committee. In her role as Chair, she says, "I wanted to do more to highlight environmental issues in Missouri. I feel this is an area that tends to be overlooked and needs more individuals advocating for this issue. Unfortunately, some of the paid special interest groups working in Jefferson City do not have the same concern for the environment as many Missourians do." She has always enjoyed spending time outdoors and wants to protect the environment and places that have brought her and her family so much joy.

She and her husband have visited every state park in Missouri and have visited over 50 National Parks with their children. When asked why advocating for policy change is an effective tool for solving environmental concerns, she says, "I feel it's one of many tools needed to help protect the environment. I think approaching members of the Legislature to ask them to support environmental issues helps bring it to their attention and will hopefully make a positive impact."

Recycling Efforts to Help Earn Park Bench

BY CAITLIN ZERA

In August, the Eastern Missouri Group partnered with REI, Inc., Schnucks and Trex Manufacturers to help recycle plastic packaging waste at REI's Brentwood, MO store location. Sierra Club Member Glenn May (pictured) is leading the effort by picking up the store's plastic film and delivering it to Schnucks. Schnucks then sends the waste in bulk with its other plastic waste to Trex Manufacturers. The plastic film is then made into a wood alternative for outdoor decking and furniture. After enough plastic has been collected from the partnership with REI, Sierra Club will receive one of the Trex park benches to be placed in a local open space.

Thanks to all who helped pass CLEAN MO Amendment One, Now Support VOTE 2020

BY CAROLINE PUFALT

Clean Missouri, Amendment 1, won decisively in Nov 2018. It garnered support of over 60% of voters and over 70% of Missouri counties. Clean Missouri established a process to avoid gerrymandering of state districts, it severely limited lobbyist gifts, it lengthened the time between a legislator's retirement and when he or she can become a lobbyist, and it broadened coverage of the sunshine law to state legislators. Thanks to all who supported Clean Missouri, its passage is a huge success.

Unfortunately, this amount of transparency and good government was just too much for some politicians. The 2019 Missouri legislative session included several resolutions and a lot of hot air expended on myths about how Missouri voters were duped in supporting Clean Missouri. Fortunately, no legislation passed in 2019 to directly challenge Clean Missouri. We don't know what 2020 will bring.

To help protect and expand voter's rights further, another initiative petition, called VOTE 2020, has already been submitted to Secretary of State. But, at this writing, controversy over ballot language has resulted in a law suit and delay in signature gathering.

HOW YOU CAN HELP

Help protect voter rights in Missouri when this is resolved! Contact the Chapter office at 314-644-1011 or via email at emg.missouri.sierraclub@gmail.com.

Ameren has dipped its toe into this market with a program to build a 1 MW solar farm near St. Louis Lambert airport. Customers could sign up for blocks of solar electricity up to one-half of their household's average usage. Like the green tariff, it was quickly subscribed, even at a higher price than the usual residential rate. We as individuals need to demand more. If Ameren builds at a larger scale like 10 or 20 MW, they should be able to charge less. There's no excuse for making people pay more for renewable electricity in this day and age. Notice that St. Louis' resolution only applies to electricity, not transportation. But what if we make transportation electric? Electric vehicles (EVs) are the trending thing. They have the huge advantage of eliminating the tailpipe pollution that we all breathe every day. Ameren will need no urging here; they're salivating at the thought of this big new market. The trick will be to get them to charge EVs on renewable electricity. We can't settle for less. As you can see, there are many ways to meet the climate challenge and roles for everyone to play — city governments, businesses and citizens. The Sierra Club is a player in this game, and we invite you to pitch in.

HOW YOU CAN HELP

Ask your municipality's elected officials to pledge to go 100% renewable!

Executive Committee Candidates

Lyn Anthoney

My name is Lyn Anthoney. I'm a wife, mother, and grandmother. I'm also like many of you concerned about our climate, conservation and the environmental crisis and what we can do to make the necessary changes to leave this planet habitable for the next generation. I believe that working with our local and statewide elected officials is a crucial step. I also feel strongly that a love for nature begins with our young people and families and will work to develop activities that will encourage their participation in Sierra Club programs such as camping, hiking, and cycling to encourage a love of the outdoors and nature.

Robert Roberson

I am a candidate for the Eastern Missouri Sierra Club Executive Committee and believe the Sierra Club and similar organizations are critical to protect the Earth's climate and limited natural resources. The Executive Committee is an opportunity for me to further support the club's mission. By background, I am a retired certified public accountant with a 45-year career in public practice and banking. Celeste and I practiced accounting in Illinois, then moved to St. Louis about 20 years ago. The practice clients included the agricultural industry, financial institutions and local governmental units. continued on page 10)

As a bank executive I managed most facets of a community bank. Prior to retiring my volunteer activities included: Earth City Trustee, St. Louis Equity Fund Finance Committee member and SSM Hospital Advisory Board Member. After retirement, I volunteer at the Sierra Club Lemonade Stand, attend the meetings and I volunteered at the Missouri Botanical Garden and St. Francis Church. In the late 80's I converted seven acres of residential zoned land to conservation and planted over 3,000 tree seedlings. Today the results are a dense wood containing many species of trees. My hobbies include hiking and biking on the Katy Trail, photography, fishing and rebuilding old cars. I believe the future can only be saved by aggressive actions today.

Ken Schechtman

I am a lifelong activist committed to the notion that change does not happen unless ordinary people join together and demand it. Environmentalists have been doing so for decades, and anyone who considers the clean air bill or the spate of regulations implemented by the Obama administration must marvel at what we have accomplished. But because those successes are uniquely imperiled by new leadership in Washington and Jefferson City, the efforts of groups like the Sierra Club have never been more important. I have been a member of the Executive Committee for more than a decade and am currently the chair of the Committee. I am also a Washington University Professor who brings to the Club a dedication to environmentalist ideals, a scientist's measured analysis of issues and, most importantly, an abiding commitment to an effective results-oriented Club that lets no one forget that we did not stand by and watch. As a hiker with a reverence for nature, I have an obligation to Missouri's forests and to our wild and special places. As a citizen, I have been a long-time activist in support of numerous progressive causes. And as a parent, I can do nothing less than fight for the planet I will one day leave behind.

Caitlin Zera

I have been passionate about environmental issues my whole life, and I have truly appreciated the opportunity to become more involved in local and national environmental issues through the Sierra Club. I have been on the EMG Executive Committee for the past three years and worked on numerous Sierra Club initiatives, including serving as the Missouri Delegate to the National Sierra Club's Council of Club Leaders meeting this past September. I currently work for the Open Space Council for the St. Louis Region as their Program Manager, helping implement community field conservation programs. I would love the opportunity to serve another term on the Executive Committee and further connect with Sierra Club members and supporters to work as a team to create real, lasting change in our community. I would look forward to expanding my role in Club democracy efforts. I believe environmental justice education is integral to the success of environmental advocacy and activism in our region and beyond. As a member of the Executive Committee, I would look forward to empowering local constituencies, engaging members in Sierra Club programs to improve the environmental health of our region for all community members.

INTERESTED IN RUNNING FOR THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE?
