Environmental Protection Division (EPD) Public Hearing - Longleaf Energy Station

Now is an important time to let the state Environmental Protection Division (EPD) know that Georgia needs to invest in the technology of the future and not in hazardous coal fired power plants. Georgia electric utilities should invest in clean, reliable energy sources available today, such as biomass from farms and forest, wind power, solar power and energy efficiency.

EPD is holding a public hearing on June 28th to get citizen input about the hazardous pollutants that will be emitted from the proposed Longleaf Energy Station.

Longleaf Energy Station is a huge 1200 megawatt coal-fired power plant proposed for Early County in South Georgia. The power produced by this plant could be sold out of state while the pollution remains in our state. Burning coal releases massive amounts of carbon dioxide (which changes our climate); sulfur dioxide (which damages crops and trees); nitrogen oxides (a key component of smog); and mercury (a potent neurotoxin especially damaging to pregnant women and children).

Once built, this power plant will continue to produce pollutants for fifty years or more. We will be locked into breathing air contaminated with millions on tons of pollutants that are known to cause respiratory diseases and even premature death. Longleaf wants to build the plant based on old technology. Longleaf also hasn't done the right kind of review to ensure that we will breathe the least amount of pollutants as required by the law. The law requires that a hearing be held so that the public can tell EPD what it thinks about the health effects of the pollution coming to its community.

We encourage you to consider taking action now to ensure a clean energy future. For ways to get involved please contact Seandra Rawls at the Georgia Chapter office at 404-607-1262 x 222 or seandra.rawls@sierraclub.org. You can write comments to the EPD or even attend the hearings to show your support!
